

My Main Objections to Microsoft

"Microsoft is like the great white shark - a killing machine without soul or conscience that only knows its own hunger and appetites." (Mitchell Kertzman)

With Microsoft..

You never pass go, you can never hit Park Place and if you are like I am, you just hate that pudgy little banker with the white mustache and the stovepipe hat (if you know what I mean). Other than that, I hate the endless monochromic hours searching through poor documentation, paying out megadollars, feeding the shark, trying to send a simple squiggle to a Microsoft squiggle receiver.

Computers are mainly used to do the following things:

1. Write stuff.
2. Control equipment.
3. Crunch numbers.
4. Do art and photo touch up
5. Produce presentations
6. Communicate

Instead Microsoft has acted to complicate equipment control, rewrite and destroy the popular communications protocols, destroy the leading word processors and photo editors, block the capabilities of most production systems, and generally charge much more than an average citizen of the world can afford while never supporting even their own software for more than a few months. What could a thousand code monkeys write in a thousand monkey years??? Hmmm.

Dear DOJ,

Kill 'em. Bite 'em. Stomp 'em. Make 'em write bad checks. The loss of a well coutured bully does not include the death of all hair design, just the loss of a serious evil. Break that great white into a couple of tiger muskies and you've got yourself a much more friendly pond.
